1.0 Business Introduction

□ Rationale

According to Oltenacu and Algers (2005), demand of the herbal drinking products is vastly increasing in UK fresh drinking industry. As the teenagers and the older population of UK are getting more health conscious. Therefore, the demand of the fresh drinking products especially the healthy drinks made from the fresh herbal raw material is increasingly in the demand. Around the globe, the British consumers are considered strong consumers of the fresh drinking products and they use to take in regular drinking purpose (Ampuero and Bosset, 2003). This is the reason that the fresh drinking products are commonly found in every household of UK, this huge demands gives rise to increase in the fresh drinking market and offers an opportunity to take advantage through market penetration. This is also benefitting for keeping the nation healthy and strong.

In this regard, a Chinese firm will be introduced in the UK market of fresh drinking products to fulfill the demands of the consumers. According to a research by Dolan and Humphrey, (2000) in 2018 the compound annual growth rate of the fresh drinking product market will increase to 1.8% and in this the key products will be the fresh drinking tea and drinking herbal products. Further, as stated by Royal, Flint and Woolliams (2002) that the access and availability of the fresh drinking products is also one of the issues. Therefore, the new business will provide an online access to the consumers to buy the products. This will make buying easier and healthier by getting the fresh products at their door step.

“Hung Fook Tong desires to be the first choice of the UK fresh drinking products consumers through facilitating consumers with quality and fresh products at the best of their ease and convenience”.

- Aim:

The key aim of the new business is to provide customers with best quality fresh drinking products and services at the affordable rates as compared to other market competitors.

- Objectives

- To provide valuable products and services to the customers.
- To achieve the consumers' satisfaction, provide comfort and ease
- To create an understanding about the consumers' preferences and attract large number of customers.
- To build a long term relationship with customers based on loyalty and trust.
- To attain market growth in the UK fresh drinking product industry.
- To earn profits and grow business all over the UK.

- Legal status and licences

As the business is being established by an entrepreneur, therefore the nature of the venture will be sole proprietorship. The base of business operations will be in China, it will seek a legal license from the Chinese government to operate within the region and international as well. In the beginning, the scope of the business will be limited to the Chinese and UK market of fresh drinking products only. The operation units will be built in both the countries due to the very nature of the products. However, the operations and decision making will be taken care by the owner solely. Further, the business will be liable to pay the taxes for its operations in UK industry. Moreover, different types of licenses will be required to comply with the legal regulations of UK. The first one will be about getting permission to import the product from the China. Another legal requirement will be to build a set up including selling shop or place to create physical presence in the market. Moreover, other permissions and legal requirements for marketing, distribution and promotion purpose will be sought from the government of UK (Gunningham, Kagan and Thornton, 2004).

- Management team

Hung Fook Tong is a start-up business and initiated by an entrepreneur, therefore whole operations will be controlled by an autonomous authority, including all the manufacturing processes, marketing, exporting and distribution of products in UK market. In regard to spread the business in UK fresh drinking products industry, different retail stores will be opened up to distribute the products in the local market. The stores will do both the conventional selling and online distribution of the fresh drinking products in UK. The stores of Hung Fook Tong will be run by different managers of marketing, human resource, finance officer and procurement. All the managers will directly report to the business owner.

Further, there will be retail store managers who will directly deal the customers through stores and online as well. The key responsibilities will be to ensure fresh, quality service and timely delivery of the products to the customers in order to gain the consumers' satisfaction in the market. Along with this, there will be a team of sales persons who will be directly responsible to focus on the marketing efforts including direct selling, online selling through promotions and distribution strategies. This is because the business will need an aggressive marketing, in the initial stage, to reach out to the mass consumers of the fresh drinking products in UK. In this regard, a comprehensive marketing plan will be devised to target the specific audience with their specific needs to fulfil. All these initiatives will though be taken care of by own marketing team solely, without any contribution of other marketing agencies due to budget constraints. The marketing manager will respect the financial budget for this purpose and will conduct a sales forecast. Moreover, the procurement and accounts officers will be responsible to take on the inventories and the business accounts respectively. The key job of the procurement officer will be to ensure timely delivery of products from China, and further timely distribution of the products to the end consumers. In simple, the complete supply chain management from raw material to the end user will be the procurement officer's responsibility. Additionally, in the end the key role of accounts officer will be to manage and report on the finances of the business. The hierarchy of the Hung Fook Tong management has been illustrated below:

In the marketing plan, the marketing objectives will first be set in order to decide on the direction of business towards its strategic goals, aims and objectives (Jain and Haley, 2009).

- d) To increase the market share of Hong Fook Tong in the UK fresh drinking product market.

Therefore, in order to achieve the above marketing objectives it is important to specifically select the target audience, market segmentation, products range and variety in the UK market. As required, the business will target the teenagers and older people who take the healthy drinking products than the other consumers of different age groups. The class group will be varied from middle, upper middle and upper class in the class economy. Specifically, the health conscious British and Chinese consumers will be targeted in UK for the business. The edge of this business is to provide high quality fresh drinking products at the door of the consumers. The convenience and ease for the busy schedule consumers will prove favourable to increase the market share. In this regard, the prices will be kept affordable for teenagers and older people as they have limited budget for their regular expenses.

Hung Fook Tong will create its marketing position aligned with its vision to be the first choice of the UK fresh drinking product consumers. Therefore, the key target will be to provide quality and fresh products to the consumers at reasonable prices. Product range will also be created to offer a variety of products to target consumers. This pricing strategy will be useful in creating mass number of consumers and will also spread positive word of mouth regarding the product will ultimately create more number of customers in UK. The key purpose of the business will be to ensure the customer satisfaction, quality and wide range of products. This will create a positive perception/image of the products in the mind of the consumers.
